CHINESE WRITING

If adequate standards of instruction were available, the task would be more difficult than eliminating the "writing." The Chinese fundamentals are involved in the control of the habits of the brush in the brush strokes which form the characters. It is essentially the same as the control of the pen in the strokes of cursive strokes. However, the Chinese have a fundamental understanding of the characters and their uses and the writing technique is mastered by experience and practice. In addition, adequate standards of instruction were available.

PHRENOLOGY

Answer—Exhaustive research has not enabled science to specify definitely that a man with a certain shaped head will be a criminal. Many extravagant claims have been made relative to phrenology, but such claims have not been based on scientific fact. On the other hand, many fine, upright, and honest individuals have heads which deviate very much from the normal.

AGE OF BLOOD-STAINS

Answer: I have personally made tests which show that the stains can be positively identified as being bled from the stains which I examined were on an old army uniform and on an old murder case. I have observed stains of this kind in my own laboratory for many years old and I have observed many these specimens in evidence in both old and tentative crimes. These stains are well stained and the color of the stains reaction with indigo solution blood stain is from red to from red to the other stains.

SCIENCE IN ACTION

QUESTION: What brands of automobiles are in your detective's car?

what the word implies—a photograph so small that it requires a microscope to distinguish it; for example, a picture no larger than a pin-head of the signing of the "Declaration of Independence." An enlarged photograph is made by enlarging the size of the normal-sized portrait or view. A portrait of President Roosevelt's face three feet long would be an enlargement. The photo-micrograph is a greatly magnified photograph of a very small object as seen through a microscope. In a photo-micrograph the small scratches on a bullet, invisible to the naked eye, appear as definite grooves.

THE LIE DETECTOR

Answers—In the hands of one properly qualified to operate it, the lie detector is an invaluable aid to modern crime detection. However, it has its limitations and should be operated only by those who have special training and who are capable of making the proper interpretations of the recordings. I have found its use to be of inestimable value in many of my cases, exonerating innocent persons from suspicion as well as determining those guilty of knowledge.

1. The first step is to identify the key components of the system. This includes understanding the hardware, software, and data involved.

2. Next, we need to establish a baseline for the system's performance. This involves monitoring various metrics over time.

3. Once the baseline is established, we can begin to analyze the system's behavior. This includes looking for patterns and anomalies.

4. The final step is to implement changes to improve the system's performance. This may involve updating software, changing hardware, or modifying data.

"Duke" Elauria? Was she really a desperate woman who rid her of the man who had been so humanly kind to her, who took her time and gave her kisses? Was the attack on her person part of the macabre plot? But Inspector Gusman could not bring himself to link the unhappy woman with the murder. The battering of her head was too brutal to be part of a pre-arranged, rehearsed plan. But if she did not engineer the murder, did she not precipitate it? This, Inspector Gusman decided to find out.

FROM Isabel Matias he learned the story of Felicidad Tayag, a typical Manila (or any big city, for that matter) story. It was the story of a girl who craved gorgeous clothes and jewelry. Lured by satyrs, she followed the steps of Manila's loose women whose clinging clothes hid sin-wrecked bodies. But she grew tired of the life that gave her trinkets and alluring gowns but made her a pariah. She wanted to be free from the perennial dread of a policeman's uniform. Thus when a man offered her a home, she gladly consented to live with him. It was at this time that Elauria, the boss of Manila's gangland, entered her life. Attracted to him, she gave up the chance to grasp the things she had been missing for the thrill, danger and excitement promised her by the debonair vice lord.

But who was the man from whom Elauria snatched Felicidad? Inspector Gusman snapped at the girl's mother. Surely this was a lead.

"Andres Donato," came the ready answer.

The hopes of Inspector Gusman were again dashed to the ground. Andres Donato! And the initials on the handkerchief were J. C. Still, could it be possible that Donato, blinded by an insane desire to get even with the man who stole his woman, hatched the whole infernal plot to the minutest details, even to the extent of using the handkerchief of someone else entirely to mislead the authorities? At any rate, the detective decided to run down this perplexing angle of the case.

Accompanied by Isabel Matias, Inspector Gusman swooped down upon the house of Andres Donato in Galas, which is located in the suburbs of Manila. The detective found his quarry, who, much to his surprise, submitted to him peacefully. He lost no time in taking him to headquarters for questioning.

Inspector Gusman was due for another disappointment that day. Andres Donato, under severe grilling, not only denied any knowledge of the crime but furnished his investigator with an air-tight alibi. Asked for his whereabouts on the night the life of Eugenio Elauria was snuffed out, he simply answered: "I was sleeping."

Andres Donato, however, could easily simulate sleep, slip out of his home unnoticed, and return to his apartment. He knew who attacked him but he carried the secret with him to the grave. J. C. was Inspector Gusman's man!

To the apartment house in Kaimbas Street Inspector Gusman repaired again. At every flat he knocked and entered. To each occupant he asked one question: Did you know anyone whose initials were J. C.? Some shook their heads, some stared at the detective dumbly, some indignantly. Then finally, he was informed of the slain girl's mother, who furnished him the clue he needed. There was a certain Julian Canlas who occupied the apartment two doors from the murdered man's flat.

THE hunt was getting hotter. The detective resumed his questioning of the occupants of the building and asked another question: who was the man who was taken away from the quarry. He consulted the Inspector. A pretty woman, the mother of the slain girl, was always with them. They were not far from the underworld.
